JULIO CESAR CHAVEZ JR. (43-0-1, 1 NC, 30 KOs)...

- WBC middleweight world champion...
- Former WBC Silver middleweight champion, one successful defense...
- Former WBC Latino super welterweight champion...
- Former WBC Continental Americas super welterweight champion, one successful defense...
- Former WBC Youth super welterweight champion...

At the age of 25, Julio is a seven-year pro. The WBC middleweight world champion, he is the oldest son and namesake of the legendary "El Grande Campeon Mexicano" - former four-time world champion Julio Cesar Chavez, who was inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame on June 12, 2011.

Julio Jr. won the WBC title with a 12 round unanimous against previously undefeated defending champion Sebastian Zbik in his last fight on June 4.

After the fight, Dan Rafael wrote on ESPN.com [excerpts]: Julio Cesar Chavez Sr., the greatest and most popular fighter in Mexican history, will be inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame. But before making his way to Canastota, N.Y., to participate in that piece of history, he was ringside at Staples Center for another piece of family history. His oldest son, 25-year-old Chavez Jr., won a world title in the same city where Chavez Sr. had won his first championship and in the same building where he won his 107th and final professional fight in 2005 (headlining a card his son also fought on).

Chavez Jr. has come a long way since he turned pro as a 17-year-old in 2003....

In Zbik, Chavez was facing the best opponent of his career.... Zbik clearly won most of the early rounds before Chavez began to pick it up in the fifth round, when he wobbled Zbik with a right hand in the final seconds. Chavez had another big round in the seventh in what was an increasingly exciting slugfest. The fight was tight down the stretch, but Chavez was clearly landing harder punches. He was destroying Zbik with his body attack, especially late in the fight. He closed very strong, sweeping the final three rounds on all three scorecards to win the majority decision that perhaps could have gone either way by a point or two.

All credit to the son of the legend. Chavez Jr. showed a lot of heart and determination, put on a terrific fight and won a title. In doing so, father and son become the fifth such duo to win titles in boxing history. [End Rafael item]

Fightwriter.com's Graham Houston reported [excerpts]: The son of Mexico's most celebrated fighter showed guts, determination and stamina in his hard-working and deserved majority decision win over Sebastian Zbik to capture the WBC middleweight title.... It was a fight that saw Zbik having success in the early rounds while Chavez finished strongly. Some of the middle rounds were open to debate, but rounds 10, 11 and 12 were all Chavez.

Chavez showed improvement under trainer Freddie Roach. Junior dug in and showed the heart and desire of a real fighter. He threw combinations more impressively than I have ever seen him throw them, letting his hands go in a way that impresses the judges. When the chips were down he had to fight - and fight hard - to win the belt.

Chavez...showed that he can fight and battle through adversity. Zbik...had come to win, having prepared for a month in Los Angeles, and he wasn't a pushover.

Chavez clearly paid his dues in the gym. The way he came on in the late rounds showed a high degree of fitness. His body punching evoked memories of his father.... The left hook downstairs is a punishing weapon. Zbik had a sturdy look, but the body battering had drained his resources by the 10th round.

Chavez's physical strength surprised me.

The Mexican fans love him, and why not? The young man comes to fight. [End Houston item]

A turning point in the career of Manny Pacquiao came when trainer Freddie Roach introduced him to the right hook. Roach introduced Julio to physical conditioning and proper preparation for a fight.

Freddie said, "This was my third fight working with Julio. Julio has total dedication in the gym. He's never said 'No' to me. Whatever I tell him to do, he does. He's working great. All those rumors about him being lazy and so forth, I find not to be true.

"The thing is, when you don't have the amateur experience, you've got to take the long road and you don't fight a good level of competition at first. He's still learning his trade as a pro. Most amateurs, if they have 150 or something amateur fights, they've learned their trade in the amateurs. You can move them up as a pro a lot quicker. So they moved him along in the correct manner. He's taken those small steps up."

Strength and conditioning coach Alex Ariza said, "Like everybody else, I heard the rumors and stories. It wasn't until the Duddy fight, when I was training him, that I just didn't see what everybody was saying about him – lack of intensity, lazy, doesn't train hard.

"I've been very fortunate. I think I've worked with the best in the sport, from Manny Pacquiao to Vanes Martirosyan to Amir Khan, and now Julio. I was surprised, after hearing all the stories, that he was able to keep up with these guys speed-wise. Strength-wise, forget about it because he's probably the strongest kid I've ever had. It was just one of those things that I just had to figure out how to tap into it. Once I could get his confidence that he wasn't going to get tired, he wasn't holding back. He wasn't trying to reserve himself. Then, I knew he had it.

"If you watch the Duddy fight, from the ninth round till the 12th round is when he really just turned it on. That's when everybody came up to me and said they couldn't believe it. The funny thing is, I was in the bus with John Duddy on the way to the airport after the fight and he said, 'I thought Chavez couldn't make it past six rounds but once I saw what was going on, I knew I was in trouble.' "

Julio said through an interpreter, "Back in the day, I trained myself. I didn't know anything about exercise or dieting or anything like that. My problem was always conditioning. If things had stayed the same, my career would have gone nowhere.

"Now, with Freddie and Alex, I follow the regimen and it's changed everything drastically. You never realize what you're capable of because without conditioning, you're just relying on instinct. Now that my conditioning is good and I know that I won't get tired, a lot more things, skill-wise, are starting to come out of me."

When Julio was born in February, 1986, his father was 23 years old and had a professional record of 49-0. He had won the WBC super featherweight world title 17 months earlier and made three successful title defenses. Julio Senior first won WBC super lightweight world title at the age of 22 in his 44th pro fight.

AMATEUR, PERSONAL BACKGROUND: Julio said, "I was born and raised in Culiacan. I have two brothers, Omar and Cristian. I've lived in Culiacan my whole life except for one year when I lived with my mother in Riverside, California. That's when I was 16.

"I went to the gym with my father as far back as I can remember – I must have been two years old at the time. I played almost every sport when I was little – soccer, baseball, tennis, just whatever was going on at the time.

"When I lived in Riverside, I had a friend that had a boxing gym here. I went there to train, and that's when I started to take everything seriously.

“I didn’t have any amateur fights. I just boxed in a couple of exhibitions when I was about 12 or 13.” [note: one of the exhibitions was against Jorge Paez Jr., the son of former IBF featherweight world champion Jorge “Maromero” Paez]...

From chavez360.com [excerpts]: Julio Cesar Chavez Carrasco was born on February 16, 1986, to legendary boxing champion Julio Cesar Chavez Gonzalez and Amalia Carrasco. At the time, his father had already won fifty professional fights and had three successful defenses of his WBC super featherweight title. It wasn’t long before Julito started going with him to watch him fight, and the boy would be seen carried around the ring after his father’s victories. Early on, Julito developed a love for the sport, even though he didn’t completely realize the significance of his father’s ring presence.

Though the young Chavez was so fond of boxing, he never thought of becoming a boxer. Growing up, he played soccer, baseball and basketball and at one point even thought of becoming a professional baseball player.

At first, Julio Sr. was set against the idea of his son becoming a boxer, but Julio Jr. was even more determined. In a way, his whole life had been leading up to it, and he couldn’t think of anything he wanted more. Junior was finally able to convince his parents to give him a shot.

“10 fights,” his dad said. He would let his son fight 10 fights, as his own mother had allowed him to do, in order to see whether Julio Jr. had what it takes to make it in the ring. End [chavez360.com item]
